

Restorative Justice In Prisons A Prisons may not appear to be a natural place for restorative justice initiatives. They are filled with offenders who have been sentenced, typically without having been invited to participate in any restorative processes. Restorative Justice in Prisons | Restorative Justice If prison governors want to reduce reoffending while promoting the interests of victims in the justice system, it is vital that they ensure restorative justice is available. This is a guest post from the Restorative Justice Council who launched their guide to restorative justice in prisons earlier Restorative justice in prisons – Russell Webster Last week, I was lucky enough to be invited by Prison Fellowship to attend a session of their Sycamore Tree programme. It was a fascinating insight into the work that they do with prisoners and a great opportunity to discuss with prisoners what they thought that they had got from the course.
